Alcela Overview

Who we are

Alcela is a healthcare delivery and technology accelerator. Alcela invites startups with tested innovative technologies and services to transform healthcare across multiple segments of the global market.

What we do

Alcela supports early-stage health-technology and healthcare delivery companies to grow and scale via mentorship, access to markets and investment. Global experience has allowed them to provide hands-on inputs on health; from clinical care to public health, and from machine intelligence to large scale operations management. Alcela network companies have operations in over 25 countries targeting large segments of healthcare providers and patients. Alcela also invites startups to early stage investment, linked closely to mentorship and access programs. Current ventures in healthcare include Alcela Analytics, Alcela Care, Lung Health Corporation,   in addition to two software products hydra and insights.

Alcela's founder, Dr. Aamir Khan, has founded companies in global health (IRD), health information technology (IHS), healthcare (CHS) and the venture accelerator space (Alcela). These non-profit and social enterprise ventures utilize technology and innovation to improve access to healthcare and prevention. .

Where we are

Alcela is based in Singapore.

Expectations from the workshop

Alcela has two principle expectations of the workshop:
1. To contribute to the awareness of the roles of healthcare accelerators in general, and how the SIHI platform might integrate them.
2. Following possible integration, to facilitate identifying potential startup companies or products that are beyond conception stage and have demonstrated early proof of market demand or niche viability.

An Alcela-SIHI partnership could possibly be a curation process that leads to an invitation for a startup or a product to be accelerated at Alcela. Please note, Alcela does not respond to unsolicited enquiries for accelerator investments.
